
cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by RUMBLE IN THE BRONX! - 2009/09/10 02:57

Hi everyone, I am a graduating senior in college. I'm trying to plan my first trip to Europe (after graduation, around the middle of June) and would like some advice and opinions on how to do it correctly. I will be there for 2 weeks and would like to hit the major countries (England, SPain, France, Italy, Germany, umm maybe a couple others I can't think of off the top of my head). Cost is important to me although if something is a necessity or is highly recommended by many people then I have no problems spending money to make sure my trip goes smoothly. Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by menno Sikking - 2009/09/10 02:57

<http://qqq.com/dtt>

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by menno Sikking - 2009/09/10 02:57

for a good site about europe take a look at WWW <http://qqq.com/dtt> here you can find al the info about your trip ciao, menno

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Customer Relations EPS - 2009/09/10 02:57

Hi everyone, I am a graduating senior in college. I'm trying to plan my first trip to Europe (after graduation, around the middle of June) and would like some advice and opinions on how to do it correctly. I will be there for 2 weeks and would like to hit the major countries (England, SPain, France, Italy, Germany, umm maybe a couple others I can't think of off the top of my head). Cost is important to me although if something is a necessity or is highly recommended by many people then I have no problems spending money to make sure my trip goes smoothly. Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu For details on travel between UK and Paris/Brussels/Calais/Lille, look at Eurostar's Web page <http://www.eurostar.com/eurostar/> where you'll find details of fares, timetables and special offers as well as discounted hotels for Eurostar passengers.

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Henrik Evanth - 2009/09/10 02:57

Hi everyone, I am a graduating senior in college. I'm trying to plan my first trip to Europe (after graduation, around the middle of June) and would like some advice and opinions on how to do it correctly. I will be there for 2 weeks and would like to hit the major countries (England, SPain, France, Italy, Germany, umm maybe a couple others I can't think of off the top of my head). Cost is important to me although if something is a necessity or is highly recommended by many people then I have no problems spending money to make sure my trip goes smoothly. Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu Two weeks for those countries are much too less. Each country has its own special culture. I would suggest you either extend your vacation with a few weeks or you decide to go to just one or two countries. The best way (cheapest also I think) to travel around Europe is with a eurorail pass. The european rail system is very good and you can go almost anywhere. If you are interested in meeting people the youth hostels are the best places to stay. They are fairly cheap, the standard is quite ok. In most cities their are tourist informations right at the train stations and they are accustomed to backpackers, so they would be able to give you good advice where to stay. /Henrik

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Thomas M Allen - 2009/09/10 02:57

I am a graduating senior in college. I'm trying to plan my first trip to Europe (after graduation, around the middle of June) and would like some advice and opinions on how to do it correctly. I will be there for 2 weeks and would like to hit the major countries (England, SPain, France, Italy, Germany, umm maybe a couple others That's an incredibly ambitious itinerary for two weeks!!! If you're interested in seeing any more of those countries other than taking the train in, taking the train out and seeing nothing than the inside of a number of train stations, you either need two or three months or you'll have to limit where you go. If you really have only 2 weeks, why not pick one country, put your energy there, and save the others for another time?

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Henny Keuben - 2009/09/10 02:57

Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu For Lisbon, Portugal you might have a look at <http://www.distrimarketing.pt/pv> Have a good trip Chris

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Henny Keuben - 2009/09/10 02:57

Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu For Lisbon, Portugal you might have a look at <http://www.distrimarketing.pt/pv> Have a good trip Chris

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by Orlando B. Manta - 2009/09/10 02:57

: Two weeks for those countries are much too less. Each country has its own special culture. I would suggest you either extend your : vacation with a few weeks or you decide to go to just one or two countries. If you look at it that way, then why not take a few months off and spend it ALL in one country ? For a first-time traveller to Europe, it's actually better to get a good glimpse of many countries in a short period of time, THEN return later and spend adequate time in the country/countries in which one has the most interest...

cheapest way to travel around europe First time trip to Europe

Posted by eyleerjs - 2009/09/10 02:57

Hi everyone, I am a graduating senior in college. I'm trying to plan my first trip to Europe (after graduation, around the middle of June) and would like some advice and opinions on how to do it correctly. I will be there for 2 weeks and would like to hit the major countries (England, SPain, France, Italy, Germany, umm maybe a couple others I can't think of off the top of my head). Cost is important to me although if something is a necessity or is highly recommended by many people then I have no problems spending money to make sure my trip goes smoothly. Also looking for books/web pages/FAQs that could be helpful. Thanks a lot. Dzu I like to go someplace for at least 3-5 days
